WILLKOMMEN.

Colorado Springs extends a very heartly welcome to the distinguished guests now within her limits; to the editors, German, Austrian, and Hungarian, who have come so far to visit us and whose stay is unfortunately so short. In their extended trip through our country they will doubtless see many things worthy of remembrance, and amidst such a multiplicity of objects the space for each will be small. We trust, however, that Pike's Peak may stand out from among the less conspicuous objects, even when a backward glance shall be cast over the long journey in the far European homes, and that the little city at its base may be remembered as a place which has more than usual attractions and which extends a hearty welcome to all visitors within its gates.

MEMORIAL DAY.

While there may be in certain quarters too much of tendency to lower the tone of Decoration Day, and to convert it into an ordinary holiday like any other, there can be no doubt that this solemn commemoration of the deaths and the services of those who gave their lives for their country in the great civil war, has taken a firm hold on the hearts of the American people. With each recurring anniversary of the day there is not lacking a sufficient influence to insist on its due observance, in all its proper spirit, and even among those who are not active participants in its exercises there are thousands who are strongly influenced to patriotism by the sentiment which pervades the community on this occasion. We know not what may come to the day when the last of the veterans shall sleep by the side of those whose graves are now covered with flowers, but so long as the heroes of the war form a living center around which patriotic sentiment may gather there is no danger that Decoration Day will not be observed and observed in the right spirit.

And it is well that it is so; for the American nation above all others needs to cultivate the spirit of patriotism. [illegible] the nations of the earth set with a mighty stream of aliens pouring constantly in upon us we are exposed alike to the danger of forgetfulness and that of ignorance. It will not do for Americans to lose sight of the fact that the freedom which we enjoy and the institutions under which we live are not like those of other nations, but are superior to them. Nor have we right to believe that these institutions are not exposed to peril. One does not need to be a very close reader of the newspapers to know that the spirit of sectional narrowness and intolerance which led to the war of thirty years ago has not altogether disappeared, and that other questions of danger besides slavery already loom on the horizon of our national destiny.

We falter not for a moment in our confidence in the glorious destiny of the American people, but it is the height of folly to refuse to see the dangers to which we are exposed. The presence in the country of an increasing number of ignorant and debased masses, easily influenced by the worst emotions and swayed to extremes of thought and action by unscrupulous demagogues, and the equal evil of an increasing class of wealth and influence who take no part in public affairs, who do not even have patriotism enough to vote, are an important part of the dangers before us. To oppose these the nation must rely upon its patriotic American born citizens. The oppressed of all lands swarm to this country because it is America, and America it must be kept for their sakes as well as our own. We need a revival of old fashioned patriotism, the patriotism which makes the poor man set country ahead of riches, and the rich man ahead of ease and pleasure. That we have this spirit is not to be denied, but we need more of it. To cultivate it is not the least of the purposes of Memorial Day. To honor the brave is well; but to use their memory as an influence to safeguard the Republic and to make the living honorable is better.

COLORADO COLLEGE COMMENCEMENT.

The programme for Commencement week is just announced, and calls for special notice because of its particularly interesting features.

Conspicuous among the latter is the laying of the corner stone of the new library, which is to take place Monday afternoon, June 12, at half past four o'clock, immediately after the Class Day exercises of Cutler Academy, which occur at three o'clock. Dr. Montague will deliver the address at the laying of the corner stone, and President Slocum will make a statement concerning the gift to the College and the plans of the trustees in the erection of the building. The occasion will be one of very great interest. Let us hope Commencement next year may witness the laying of the corner stone of the Scientific Building, which is the next one to come.

The regular graduating exercises of Cutler Academy take place the following afternoon, Tuesday, in the Presbyterian Church; the address is to be given by Rev. E. Turnbull Lee, D.D., of Pueblo, and nine young people will receive diplomas certifying that they have honorably completed the course of study preparing them for college work.

The class graduating from the College numbers five. It too will hold Class Day exercises, in the chapel, on Monday morning. Monday, then, may be denominated "Class Day." We are glad to see this pleasant custom obtaining a foot hold in our town.

Commencement proper occurs as usual on Wednesday, this year the 14th of June. The Red Vase of Denver is to make the address to the graduates, and each member of the class is to take part in the programme.

On Wednesday afternoon President and Mrs. Slocum hold a reception for all the students and friends of the College and Academy.

In addition to the above-mentioned events there will occur the Annual Oratorical Contest on Monday evening, the Alumni banquet at The Antlers on Tuesday evening, and a meeting of the Alumni of Cutler academy in the College chapel on Wednesday evening. The Baccalaureate sermon, by the President will of course open this interesting series of events. This will be delivered in the First Congregational Church on Sunday morning, June 11, and on the evening of that day, Rev. Frank T. Bayley of Denver will give the annual address before the Young Men's and Young Women's Christian associations in the same place.

Altogether twelve events will occur in these four days—all of them of interest to the town as well as to the young people to whom this season means so much. One is tempted by such a programme to renew his youth, and to bear as active a part in the good times as the cares and trials of adult life will allow him. It is a time of rejoicing for all who love young people and delight to see them well launched in life.

Yesterday morning the Denver News contained an editorial on the Corrigan-Hyatt contest case to the Board of Aldermen, which was a direct appeal to mob violence. Mr. Corrigan, it will be remembered, owes his seat to a vote taken by the Board in which a certain Doyle, who had been elected as a Republican, gave his vote for the Democrat, being influenced, it is claimed, by improper motives. On Saturday evening, however, Mr. Doyle seems to have had a fit of repentance, and voted with the other Republican members that Mr. Corrigan was not entitled to his seat. However the merits or demerits of the case may be, the matter is not of deep concern to people outside of Denver. It is of concern that one of the principal newspapers of the chief city of the State should advise the employment of illegal force in a contest of this kind. There has been [illegible] The News was a Populist or a Democrat, but judging by this editorial it is a Populist and of the Kansas variety. If violence is employed, The News will be largely responsible for it.

The Commencement exercises of the University of Colorado are being held in Boulder during the present week. On Sunday the baccalaureate address was given by President Baker and yesterday the annual exercises of the literary societies were held, together with a reception of the senior class. This evening Dean Hart will deliver an oration, to-morrow will occur the class day exercises and the alumni exercises and the commencement concert, and on Thursday the commencement proper will take place, the oration being delivered by Rev. R. D. Grant of Portland, Oregon. There will be ten graduates the present year, of whom four receive the degree of bachelor of arts.

The sermon preached by Rev. Mr. Taylor before the Grand Army post on Sunday evening has been spoken of by many who heard it as the best of the kind ever delivered in the city. We take pleasure in presenting it to the attention of the [illegible] circle of GAZETTE readers.

Story of a Shrewd Monk.

At monasteries in southern France American and other visitors are proudly told the story of the exploits of a monk who was once one of the inmates of the convent. The monks belong to a mendicant order and send out one of their members periodically on begging expeditions. The hero of the story, it happened, many years ago, had been out on one of these expeditions and was coming back to the monastery, his purse well filled, when, he was attacked in a corner of the wood by a highwayman, who pointed a pistol at his head.

The monk "came down" instantly, crying for help and handing his purse to the thief, who put it in his coat.

"Ah," gasped the monk, "take it, take it! But what a stinging the peior will give me if he thinks I made no resistance! If you are a highwayman of the fine old [illegible]"

"Certainly," said the thief. He was anxious to deserve the compliment. "Anything you wish. What is it?"

"I want to prove to the prior that I defended myself heroically against your attack. Won't you please shoot a few holes through that coat?"

He pulled off his cloak and threw it down. The thief courteously pointed his pistol at it and pulled the [illegible] was no report.

"What's the matter?" asked the monk.

"I must own to you," said the highwayman, "that I possess no such commodity as gunpowder."

"Well, you're a queer highwayman. Then please slash the cloak a little with your dirk."

"I am also destitute of a knife," said the thief. "I have no weapon of any kind. I attack none but cowards and fools."

"You do, ch?" exclaimed the monk. "Then I guess I'm as good as you. Come on!"

He fell upon the thief and quote him hip and thigh. When he had made quite sure that he had beaten the wretch into unconsciousness he repossessed himself of the purse and went on his way to the monastery.—Youth's Companion.

How Tigers Became Man Eaters.

In India, as the land of tigers, there was no difficulty in procuring them. We were only obliged to limit our numbers to seven or eight—for want of room and on account of the expense of feeding them. We lost several tigers at first from overfeeding them. The public always want to see the tigers fat and flashy, but such a condition usually conduces to fatal liver disease. The finest tigers that we had were a male and female that had been caught full grown in a pitfall. There was no doubt that they had killed—to a certainty—all of tigers which had killed and eaten many human beings on the high road to Hazaribagh.

Other kinds of natural tiger food, such as deer and wild pigs and cattle, were scarce in that part of the world, and the tigers had found human beings an easily obtainable prey. When the jaws of a tiger once close on the human neck, death is instantaneous, and the victim makes no struggle. The deer and cattle with their horns and hoofs, and the wild pigs, with their sharp tusks and bony feet, may injure the tiger, but when a tiger has once found out how easy it is to spring on a defenseless man or woman and to break their necks it becomes disinclined to other food. One two tigers were in perfect health and good condition. They were furious and would not, [illegible] be petted or played with, though they would condescend to eat the dinner [illegible] each morning. Once, [illegible] Lorrimer's Magazine.

A Well Trained Cat.

[illegible] which [illegible] had been taught to do anything. They were white [illegible] and maltese, and their eyes were as blue as the skies in June. Unlike others of their species, they dearly loved to play in water, and they would spend hours fishing chips out of a pan of water. One of them, Jake, was a regular John Sullivan of a cat. He would fight anything and everything. The only safe way to take him out was in a [illegible]. I had one made with perforations, which I [illegible] and in which I set with his head out, save when I saw some thing which I fancied he might possibly think he could fight, when, as a measure of safety, I would lock his head down and tighten the draw-string. He knew his rights as well as I did, and when he wanted to go out he would go and take it down, bring it to me and sit down and look wistfully first at the bag and then at me.

Another trick of this intelligent creature was, when we were in the park, where he dearly loved to go, to run to a flower bed, bite off a blossom and bring it to me. As these Iceland cats are the most desirable of household pets it is a pity that it is almost impossible to keep them any length of time in this climate. Like trout, they require a low temperature. Anything above 65 degrees is unfavorable to them.—Interview in Chicago Herald.

Curiosities About the Rhinoceros.

The rhinoceros is a beast of legendary and mythical associations as well as of stern reality. In the mythology of all the old world he figures very conspicuously, but is worshiped as a deity by the early Japanese tribes and hurled [illegible] builder of the earth and the heavens by several East African peoples. The old Jewish Talmud declares that his skin is folded as a result of having been exposed 40 days and 40 nights in the waters of the flood. The waters of the great deluge were hot, according to Talmudic lore, when Noah sent forth the dove. The dove departed and without tarrying put her feet in the water. The waters of the flood were hot, and they scalded and peeled the legs of the dove. It was also said—by some [illegible] would not grow on her legs any more, and the skin sealed off. Now, doves which have red and featherless legs are of the sort which Noah sent forth.

This is only cited for authority to show why the skin of the rhinoceros lays in folds and ridges. Certainly if the waters were hot enough to "pickle and scald" a dove's legs at the moment of contact, they would make the skin of a rhinoceros too large for him in the course of [illegible]

"But," you say, "why was he exposed in the waters of the great deluge while all the other beasts were safely housed in the ark?" Simply because he was too large to be put aboard the great [illegible]. The bulk of the [illegible] discovered as to how the floating operation was performed.—St. Louis Republic.

Climate and Disease in Japan.

The European sojourning in Japan is particularly affected through his nervous system and his respiratory organs, as a result of the humidity and the abrupt changes of temperature. In regard to the respiratory apparatus it appears that the number of movements is augmented, and the tension of the aqueous vapor being very great that of the oxygen is diminished with resulting [illegible] In regard to the digestive [illegible] nutrition—from rheumatism and diabetes to gout and anæmia, which are everyday diseases in Japan. Contrary, in fact, to the general notion, central Japan possesses a climate exceedingly favorable to the development of anæmia.

Further, the climate of Japan, through its fervid heat, depresses the nervous system—hence diminution of physical activity, enfeeblement of the cerebral faculties, followed by apathy, somnolence and complete prostration of the powers. In order to avoid the pernicious influence of the climate it is recommended that the foreigner spend the summer at the north, say at Yeso or in the north of Niphon, where the climate is dry and invigorating. Otherwise the disadvantages [illegible] will too certainly be experienced.—New York Tribune.

A Relative of a Miser.

"I was unlucky enough in my infancy to have had an uncle who was a miser, and what is still more exasperating, who had money," said Harold MacComber. "This uncle died when I was 15 years old and willed considerable of personal and real estate possessions to his relatives. Being one of not more than three nephews and two nieces, he willed me his old homestead, an uncouth looking affair, but one that was fairly valuable for its location in G[illegible]. Now, then, the fact that my uncle was a miser preyed upon my mind to such an extent that I did not rest well. I had an aching suspicion that my uncle had stowed up his money in some box and buried it, or secreted it in some crack and used it for a pillow, or did something else with it equally inconvenient. When I attained my majority [illegible] I would find a pot of money [illegible] If it was in the old homestead, and I could think of no place else so appropriate or so liable to contain it. I spent any number of days ransacking that old place, looking high and low for the hidden wealth.

"I sounded the wall for hidden recesses and tapped every inch of the floor to obtain a dull sound of extra resistance. I examined the fireplace, the garret and the cellar, but [illegible] I [illegible] in the hope [illegible] titious wealth. I crawled under the house later and examined the floor and ground without results. Then I bethought myself of the cistern, and I planned at once to have it emptied. In this cistern there was a double floor or bottom, and between the two I found a hermetically sealed case which contained some literary effusions and a number of old family trinkets of gold, but no money. The last discovery dispelled the silver after all, but only a much over-[illegible] aunted old crank. After that I have [illegible] better."—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Purely Astronomical Terms.

About 60 B. C. Hemeritus began teaching that the galaxy or "milky way" was simply a band of innumerable stars which on account of their great distance appeared very small. Time and improved appliances have proved that Democritus was correct in his surmises.—St. Louis Republic.

Matrimonial Celerity.

At Paris, Tex., a divorce was granted to a woman, and in five minutes there after she fooled the judge with another man and was married. It is one of the most remarkable cases of a hanging husband on record.—Atlanta Constitution.

There will be a special meeting of Hook and Ladder company No. 1 at 8 o'clock p. m. on Wednesday, the 31st inst. Every member of the company will please make it a point to be present.

The congregation of the First Baptist church had two of their convention delegates from Denver as preachers on Sunday—Dr. Reese of Philadelphia in the morning and Dr. Farnum in the evening.

Martin Tuttle, alias Mell Tuttle, was arrested by the police yesterday at the instance of Sheriff Moses of Pueblo. Tuttle is charged with the stealing a diamond ring from [illegible]. The ring was found upon his person.

Secretary Green has arranged to have Robinson's drug store this morning from until 10 o'clock for the convenience of those desirous of purchasing tickets for the G. A. R. exercises at the High school auditorium this evening.

[illegible] forty-five delegates to the Baptist convention in Denver reached this city yesterday over the D. & R. G. They had dinner at the Spaulding house and then went to points of interest in the vicinity. They left for Denver in the evening.

The case of Lilly vs. Dana, being an action brought by a Denver man against Marshal Dana for false imprisonment, was tried before a jury in Denver yesterday and a verdict against the Marshal in the sum of $250 was rendered. The complainant asked for $15,000 damages. The case will be appealed.

Dr. Rhecte Goode of Mobile, Ala., a prominent railroad surgeon of the South, and Dr. H. A. Munn, the United States army surgeon at Mt. Vernon barracks, Alabama, were visitors to the city yesterday with a view to testing its advantages as a place for patients with lung trouble. They were entirely pleased with what they saw.

The Columbus club held an enthusiastic meeting last evening at the hall on South Tejon street. Several new members were initiated and the treasurer reported a handsome balance on hand. After the business meeting a social session followed, at which light refreshments were served. The semi-annual meeting and election of officers will occur on next Monday evening.

There will be a sale of candy and of fancy articles to day at Montgomery hall. The young ladies have been busy in their preparations for several days and their display of wares will not fail to be very attractive. The sale will continue in the evening as well, and they hope to find a large number of patrons. In the afternoon there [illegible] on the athletic field from which the wants of bystanders for candy, etc., will be supplied.

The entire day in the District Court yesterday was taken up with the trial of the case of the People vs. W. F. McCain. The defendant is accused of borrowing a chattel mortgage, which he held, at the court house and inserting words in it, thereby increasing the value of the security. J. H. Crowell prosecuted and Hutchins & Rooney and A. C. Sloan defended. The jury had not returned a verdict at a late hour last night and were locked up for the night.

The funeral services of the late Dr. Frank A. Hale were held from his late residence yesterday afternoon, and in accordance with his expressed wish were as private as they could possibly be made. Delegations were present from the Y. M. C. A. and Acacia lodge, A. F. and A. M., of which deceased was a charter member. Rev. J. L. Taylor, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, read the service for the [illegible] and sang some of the Doctor's favorite hymns. The service at the cemetery was private.

Mr. M. T. Rucker of Aspen was in the city yesterday for the purpose of inquiring into the death of Percival Pettinger, the young man who committed suicide [illegible] last week. This he is doing for the young lady at Aspen to whom Pettinger was engaged to be married. He states that he is unable to find evidence that would prove that Pettinger had been drinking, while the coroner and other physicians declare that he was [illegible] a habitual morphine user. Mr. Rucker is forced to the conclusion that Pettinger was insane.

Reduced Prices!

I have agents in the Navajo and Ute countries who buy Indian curios for me. I have just heard from them that they are getting me a nice line of goods at lower prices than they have been able to before, and in order not to become overstocked I have reduced the prices of all the Indian goods in my store. I offer Navajo blankets at from $5 to $30 each. Chimolla and Mexican blankets at $12 to $11. Mexican hair riding whips at $1.50, large Apache war clubs at $1, and all other goods in proportion. These curios are fine ornaments for halls, libraries and dining rooms.

I carry a full line of hammocks, base balls, ball bats, letter files, blank books, desk furniture, writing furniture, writing paper, bound books, paper books, views of Rocky Mountain scenery, pens, inks, perforators, and everything kept in a first class store of the kind. The prices are right. Come in and look over the goods.
